I don't think we'll reach that threshold even if we add 99999 gorillion votes. They literally deny reality, they deny the evidence that we saw with our own eyes. What makes you think they won't just make up some random fucking shit to pass this off like that black votes counted 100x this election because of BLM. And the brainwashed normies will eat it up as usual.

I do not mean to attack you Pedo, just distraction. Timing is everything, so they say. Sometimes even entire posts are hijacked, even some Trump tweets, by "jokes". This does not help us. It can and does stop communication information and thought. I am reminded of a line of a song of my generation "fools to the left of me, jokers to the right- stuck in the middle with you" We get non stop misdirection to put it mildly from the media - MOST of the media, & as days go by even what we hailed when they came on the scene, as sources of fact, are being stifled. I come to TDW for fact and hope and on rare occasion to post something I think is relevant which I had not seen posted. Concept and usage of math made its first appearance in the Vedas, as far as I know

True. You couldn't get Hustler in MX. Those fishermen went crazy for it. A group of us went to San Felipe every year to party. Back then it was just a sleepy little fishing village. The first time I went there wasn't even one hotel, and only two restaurants. We camped at a campsite on the beach near the center of town. Just checked Google Maps to see if the campsite was still there. Nope. Buried under tourist traps.

The first four SSIDs are all broadcasted by the same Meraki access point. I see at least two access points, so that's 8 networks you can already account for, meaning comparing the number of voting machines to the number of hidden networks means nothing.

Furthermore, many enterprise access points broadcast yet another hidden network in order to monitor their own connection to the network (verifies whether they're actually online).

In public places, it's very, very common to have hidden networks when you don't want the general public to start poking at it.

Sorry, fren, but honestly, what you have here is indicative of nothing interesting.

I was just about to remark on this but you've summed it up.

Basically it looks like whatever building he is at has implemented Cisco's Meraki WiFi AP system, which I kind of detest because if you don't have an annual subscription to Cisco's service they stop working.

I'm looking at one such "dead" Meraki right now sitting on my workbench.

One of our clients had it until we replaced it with a better - and cheaper - Ubiquiti system.

Be smarter.

Ubiquiti hardware is made by contractors in China. All the code is written by contract Chinese people, in China.... because they closed down their San Jose HQ a while back. Although they moved the HQ to NYC, the engineering is in Latvia (or Lithuania, I can't remember which).

Their AI "special sauce" has publicly been blown up... it's just backend scripts, no learning.

They've already been caught selling equipment to Iran, in violation of sanctions. Their gear collects packet-level telemetry and sends it to China, without the users' knowledge or consent.

They were dumb enough (or incompetent enough) to get phished by Russian cybercriminals back in '15 to the tune of $46 Million dollars. I don't feel bad, though.... a large portion of their funding comes from Summit Partners, the shady left-wing "alternative funding" firm with ties to Zuckerberg, Gates and Jack Ma.

Ignore Wikipedia, and spend 10 minutes on DDG to confirm everything I wrote. Then maybe you can drop the arrogance and leave the ad hominem for someone with less industry knowledge next time.

Take any Meraki device. Flip it over.

Look at the product sticker and please read where it says "Made in Taiwan".

It's the 4th line down on the MX64W wireless router/firewall. Can't miss it.

Same as Ubiquiti products.

"But Taiwan is not China!"

Yes and no. Technically no, but most companies are outsourcing product manufacturing to Taiwan which in turn is having products made 90%-95% in China, shipping them to Taiwan for final finishing and slapping that "Made in Taiwan" label on them that sneaks past U.S. regulators so easily. Where are iPhones made? China.

Where is pretty much everything not Samsung-proprietary made? China.

That includes precious Cisco gear since Cisco closed their factories in Mexico back in 2012 and moved production for Eastern Europe/Russia to Russia and everything else to China.

I mean, Cisco even put the press release about it on their own website.

It was pretty big industry news back in 2012 when it actually happened and surprise - Cisco's gear is still on the NSA-approved list.

You have "industry knowledge" so you're supposed to not only know this already but also know about the NSA-approved list and why it exists.

As for sending telemetry/packets to China, I wouldn't know since 1) We don't implement their firewalls (they suck) and 2) we don't put their switches and APs directly on the internet (we're not stupid) and 3) we have blocks in place on the firewalls that prevents them from "phoning home" or auto-updating as well as having blocks built-in that prevent traffic inbound/outbound to anything that isn't U.S.-based (yes, I know that won't cover U.S.-based VPNs but there are no guarantees in global networking). We hand-update them when needed, i.e. "if it ain't broke, don't fix it until the yearly scheduled maintenance window) and most of the time we just monitor them via our own systems.

The Iran thing? Just how much were they fined? That's right - they weren't.

Why? Because it was a down-level distributor in the Middle East who "claimed" that Ubiquiti knew about it when they really didn't.

Lots of shit from the Middle East gets smuggled into Iran. I know, I used to live there.

The phishing thing? Who gives a fuck. Doesn't affect customers at all and pales in comparison to Washington getting scammed.

As for sending data to China, you're confusing Ubiquiti with Ring doorbells and Tik-Tok. Yes, there was an issue with UniFi gear sending some light telemetry data (not user data) to Ubiquiti's stateside data centers, but that was resolved long ago.

No one uses their "special sauce AI" stuff because we all know it's broken as fuck. That's why it's disabled by default on new gear and we never enabled it outside of a testbed where we discovered it was shit.

Goddamn, you're still dumb.

Actually, I did certifications for the gov for a couple years. So yeah, I know how those TAA/BAA supply chain lists work.

You might also want to know Cisco closed down all Chinese factories in 2016 except for sheetmetal parts and devices specifically made for mainland China. The sticker on all my MX65s, 68s and MRs say made in Mexico.

Ubiquiti gear was outed just last month sending telemetry, again. Good to see at least you were smart enough not to trust them on that point.

Look, you can choose to look at the evidence at face value and accept what it means. Or you can choose to believe the lie. I'm not here to redpill anyone's IT choices. If every IT shop chose wisely from the beginning, I wouldn't have a job getting them functional after the inevitable hack.

Sorry man. It gets out of hand here. Below is a quick explanation of what you saw.

WiFi extenders act as repeaters for a wireless network. If you have a large network in a large building, and enough extenders, computer A on one side of the building would see the exact same signal as computer B on the far other side, whether they need to or not. The wireless airwaves would be quickly overwhelmed like a shouting match in a crowded room.

Access points solve that problem. Instead of simply repeating the signal, they connect via Ethernet cable to a controller. It acts as a single WiFi network, but each user device only takes up the airwaves in the room it occupies.

What you posted is literally standard wireless networking for a large building. Nothing suspicious. No evidence of voting machines connected with just the image shown.

Just read my other comment thread. I address how it was nothing, how no one pointed that out to OP, how OP wasn't fake or gay, it just turned out to be a nothing burger. If you think things should be summarily dismissed before being proven wrong, then why even comment on this thread? I seriously addressed all of your complaints and your possible rebuttals with the other commenter. I'm not redoing the entire debate. If you have anything to add to what he said or I've said, respond to my last comment in that chain, and we can pick it up from there.

I'm legitimately curious if you think reaching out to some random twitter user, with 500k followers, that believes in Q, to be sensible. This guy has been so laughably and completely wrong about so many of his theories and I'm pretty sure that his "credentials" end at his twitter handle.

First off, just because you can see a bunch of "access points" from a WiFi analyzer app, doesn't mean that there is anything nefarious going on. There very well could be, and with the confirmation of a dominion server using WiFi today, it's plausible. However, the original post is unverified and doesn't prove a damn thing. I could easily open up 15 different networks on my home router, name them "Dominion Access Points," and then post my "findings" from my WiFi analyzer app.

Let's calm down with the Q bullshit, use common sense, and just chill out.

I haven't mentioned Q once. You've mentioned it multiple times. Maybe you should calm down?

Could OP be a LARP? Yup

Could OP be legit? Yup

If OP isn't legit, none of this matters, and why do you care about wasting Ron's time if you hate him so much?

If OP is legit, as bad of a picture as you paint of Ron, he's way more of a nerd than any of the responses here and can actually point him to properly documenting what's happening there. Ron also has been interviewed by OAN and has a larger audience. Ron isn't the be all end all for this if it's real, he's just a logical next step on the chain. Because he's also just a nobody as you point out, he's more likely to actually see this.

In summary, if this is legit, reaching out to Ron is way way way way way better than your lack of ideas. If it's not, who cares?

permalink parent save report block reply

= Boom2cannon  -2 points 10 days ago +2 / -4

You're missing what I'm saying. This isn't legit. At all. This screenshot proves absolutely nothing. And if it were proving something, it wouldn't be something that isn't already known.

I'm glad that dude has been interviewed by OAN. That doesn't mean anything. He is Q-centric and has been incredibly wrong on various different things. OAN is great, but they are still a new station that is "click-bait" at times because that's how they make money. When doing that, it is common for a new station to interview someone with a point of view that is maybe a bit more eccentric than others. Credentials, in those instances, don't really matter... Ol' Ron doesn't just become some god amongst men because he got his 5 minutes of fame from a news organization (which is my preference by the way), that has a relatively small viewership size.

Just a thought: but instead of taking this (not really) breaking story to some unknown on twitter that will basically regurgitate it to his very (relatively) small viewers, why wouldn't you instead do your best to make it available to someone that has connections with the Trump legal team?

People that want to make every tiny story into the smoking-est of smoking guns aren't helping, they're hurting.

OP posted here asking for help from nerds. After a long while, not a single nerd here had a single useful thing to say. The only tangible idea brought forth after this post had been up a bit was to bring it to Ron, a known nerd.

Someone deep in the comments that's probably not even visible at this point ended up clearing up how this is literally nothing. Cool, OP thought he was sitting on something legit, turned out not to be.

I only wanted someone nerdy to know what's going on, and what happens next. I'm not some huge Ron fanboy, I've just seen him around since the election. Especially since it turned out to be nothing, I think my point about bringing it to Ron first still made sense.

You went on for awhile about bringing it to Ron is some disaster of an idea before finally pitching your own. I'm no Qanon, but I don't automatically hate every single person that thinks there's something to it.

In the future, if there's a probably nothing burger tech wise, and we have no nerds capable of checking it out, I'd still advocate getting it to Ron. If you have literally any other MAGA nerds that have been taking on and publicizing stuff like this, I'd also advocate taking it to them.

Back in the 2016 primaries, someone named Patrick Little was running for Senate (currently Harris' seat). He's literally a holocaust denier, and publicly said it was faked by ((them))) to guilt white people into doing whatever, and still got more than a couple percent of the vote. In California. Hitler might actually win a nationwide election if he was on the ballot, and it'd be just like the first time since a significant part of the NSDAP platform was promising they'd do something about those goddamn Antifa commies that kept burning shit down u/IvankasBathWater do you have a laptop? Linux?

What you'd want to do is run a security scan against the network (or specific IP's). Using nmap for starters, greenbone/openvas for more thorough stuff, then maybe metasploit

This would reveal any and all vulnerabilities available to any bad actors who may have been there on the wifi as well.

edit: Getting list of Android apps that can do the same, standby...

1. Port Authority (find open ports like nmap)
2. cSploit (metasploit for android, finds known vulnerabilities, this is step 1 in script-kiddy hacking)
3. zAnti (toolkit with lots of features including packet capture: see if those machines are talking or listening and to what)

You'd want to run all these on that network to gather data and then afterwards it could all be analyzed here or by more professional people.

I would be surprised if the voting machine had localized encryption or end to end encryption, nothing so far suggests they are coded to be secure.

I mean Frankenstein said you can't just pop right in, which is correct.

Not to knock OP, but judging by the question being asked, there's going to be a bit of a learning curve involved with creating a rogue AP. Then we run into the issue of whether or not OP can get ahold of a wireless adapter like an Alfa AWUS036ACH quickly (which they DON'T generally sell in brick and mortar stores) or a WiFi pineapple (which OP would need to grab from Hak5).

Evil twin access points haven't worked in over a decade because all modern protocols provide the ability to verify the identity of the access point, which alerts the clients if it's changed.

Based on the screenshot, I'm guessing he has no way to do anything even if he knew how. That doesn't exactly look like a kali linux install or whatever.

But he can screenshot all those Mac addresses. That can be used to determine which machines were broadcasting those networks.

I live in an apartment building and I have never seen 17 access points in one spot. Every voting machine might be broadcasting a network and waiting for something to connect to it.

Totally agree. At least two of the devices in the pic have nothing to do with voting machines. I would think that all those other access points are not voting machines either. I wouldn't expect an individual machine to be acting as its own access point.

That is how a lot of printers can easily connect. It was a pain setting up an HP printer for my boss. It didn't want to connect to their WiFi, so the printer broadcast its own SSID and the computer could connect to it to print. Since it required them to lose internet connectivity whenever they wanted to print I had to fix it to make the printer connect to their WiFi.

Correct, every machine has their own mac address on the WiFi card (that shouldn't be in there but hey ho)

So if they have inventory of the machines where they're put they can check at what location the machine is at.

2/22/2021 I am a full access poll watcher for early voting in the Georgia runoffs. I'm at the place now and I used WiFi radar app to try and check for hidden network...

Well what do you wanna do? The exact method to change votes is to set up a spoof AP (it's likely the hidden networks are other devices already doing this....), flood the router with ack/syn to make it non-responsive, force disconnect of the connected devices on the router, then do it again while juicing your spoof AP so it's signal is stronger, and capture the SSL handshakes when those devices reconnect through your spoof AP. Now you own the connection, and you can read and write the packages going to and from the voting machine in clear text. Make a script to figure out what block of data is the votes, apply a function as it passes through your spoof. Back in the days the software to do this was called metasploit, backtrack or forensic network framework. Now you should install Kali Linux. With tutorials you should be flipping votes before midnight! (Don't do this lol).

There may be symmetric encryption, but seeing as there's no user authentication as seen in the demonstration video, I doubt it. Either way if there's strong symmetric encryption you're only a password crack away from presidential power. AWS can crack most human grade passwords within a few hours to a few days of HPC server time.

Record those hex addresses on your app.

Turn off a machine, see if one goes away.

If you can open a machine up, there should be a sticker somewhere on the circuit boards with that address. That would be the wifi circuit.

Get someone to do a man in the middle and capture packets, but at this point you could get in trouble without transparency

Look for and document any ports on the machine. USB, network, whatever. Pictures if you can. If not get some paper and draw it best you can.

Look for hidden ports, like behind a small plastic piece or an emblem/sticker.

If you get access to some application, search for every menu item and write it down or photograph it.

Look for hidden menus or protected ones which deny you access and if found demand access to it.

if by chance you get a command prompt, do "netstat -an" and record all the output pictures or write it down on a sheet of paper. do "ipconfig" look for adapters and write down the addresses -- all of them.
